The Changing Man - Wikipedia

The Changing Man is a song released by British musician Paul Weller from his studio album Stanley Road. The song was written by Weller and his manager and producer, Bob Johnson. The song features a driving rhythm and a memorable guitar riff, and Weller's lyrics reflect on the idea of change and evolution.

The song begins with a spoken introduction by Weller, who speaks about the concept of change and how it affects people's lives. He then goes on to sing about the idea of a changing man, who is constantly evolving and adapting to the world around him.

The chorus of the song is one of its most memorable parts, with Weller singing, "Is happiness real? / Or am I so jaded? / Can't see or feel, like a man been tainted."

The song's energy and rhythm are typical of Weller's early solo work, and it has become one of his most popular songs. It has been covered by several other artists, including the band Radiohead and the singer-songwriter Bryan Adams.

Overall, "The Changing Man" is a powerful and thought-provoking song that explores the concept of change and evolution in a way that is both universal and personal. It is a testament to Weller's talent as a songwriter and performer, and it remains a staple of his live shows to this day.
